Reserve judgment

The coaches' choices to fill out the roster will be announced today. Who's your gotta-be-there NBA All-Star?

BY SPORTING NEWS

Thursday, Feb 9, 2012

Reserves rhymes with deserves, which is perfect today as we prepare to read and react to the NBA All-Star rosters.

Who deserves to be among the reserves?

The Sporting News team's thoughts:

Sean Deveney, NBA writer: "Russell Westbrook may have his detractors, but even they would have to admit he is the biggest no-brainer selection for the All-Star reserves. He is averaging 22.3 points, 5.9 assists and 4.8 rebounds for the best team in the league. He and Kevin Durant make a formidable one-two punch, and they both deserve their spots in Orlando."

Garry D. Howard, editor in chief: "I know, I know. He just stepped on Luis Scola's face and was suspended for a game, but ... still ... Kevin Love needs to get some love from the Western Conference coaches. He's fourth in the league in scoring (25.0 ppg) and second in rebounding (13.7 rpg) behind Dwight Howard. He shoots the three well and bangs inside consistently. C'mon, man. Love is a no-brainer."

Marcus DiNitto, NBA editor: "LaMarcus Aldridge was robbed last year and has to be on the West team this season—in fact, he should be starting. The Blazers are winning, and Aldridge is the main reason, as he leads the team in minutes (36.7), points (23.7) and rebounds (8.7) per game. Not only will you see him in Orlando later this month, but he'll also be with LeBron, Kobe and the rest of Team USA in London this summer."

Sean Gentile, NBA editor: "Tyson Chandler leads the league in field-goal percentage (71 percent) and is instrumental to the Knicks offense because he's a good finisher; teams need to account for him near the rim, which opens things up for his teammates. It's not his fault they're not cashing in. Oh, and he's one of the league's best defenders and rebounders, which is why the Knicks paid him in the first place."
